The 5-Minute Nervous System Reset

Three body-based tools you can use right now, in ten minutes or less.

Your nervous system does not need an hour. It needs the right signal.

These three practices are drawn from The Somatic Anxiety Reset. Use them before you open the workbook, between sessions, or any moment your nervous system needs to find its way back to calm.

01 The Settling Breath

2 minutes

Your exhale is your fastest signal of safety.

- Inhale slowly through your nose for a count of 4.
- Exhale through slightly parted lips for a count of 8.
- Repeat 5 times. Your exhale must be longer than your inhale.
- Notice the heaviness in your limbs. That is your nervous system responding.

Why it works: The long exhale directly activates the vagus nerve, shifting your nervous system from threat to rest.

02 The Safety Anchor

3 minutes

A physical signal your body can learn to trust anywhere.

- Take 3 settling breaths and arrive at a quieter place.
- Press your thumb and index finger together firmly.
- Hold for 10 seconds while you breathe and feel the calm.
- Release. Repeat 5 times. Use this anywhere anxiety spikes.

Why it works: Repetition builds a neural pathway. Over time, this pressure alone becomes a shortcut to calm.

03 The Jaw Release

5 minutes

Release the tension your body forgot it was holding.

- Place fingertips on your jaw just in front of your ears.
- Let your mouth fall open -- no forcing. Feel the release.
- Move your jaw slowly left, right, then 3 circles each way.
- Press tongue to roof of mouth for 10 seconds. Breathe.

Why it works: The jaw is a primary storage site for anxiety. Releasing it directly impacts the vagus nerve and shoulders.

One breath is enough to begin.

These three practices are the foundation of The Somatic Anxiety Reset -- a 30-day nervous system workbook for women.
